ABOUT...

- Neriah was born in Los Angeles, and split time between Malibu and Brentwood on account of her parents' divorce. Growing up, her dad was divorced four times, which was tough on Neriah due to the frequent moves and new "step-moms" in and out of her life. She was a straight-A student growing up who always valued education – and she even graduated college a year early. Neriah is very close with her three siblings who all pursue music in some fashion. She is also very familiar with the Hollywood scene – her mother is TV personality, Brooke Burke.
- Music always ran in Neriah's family – her grandmother was an opera singer and pianist. Following in her footsteps, Neriah wrote her first song at 5-years-old. She is currently in the intensive music program, STARGATE, a nine-month program where artists write and record songs almost every day while receiving feedback and lessons from mentors. She has released music on her own and has even collaborated on songs with artists such as, Phillip Lawrence and Babyface. Neriah has also taught herself to play the piano, the guitar and the ukulele.
- Neriah started posting on TikTok to help promote music she was releasing – and her account quickly took off. Neriah now has 55K followers who tune in for covers and original tracks. Her music has started to gain traction on all platforms, and two of her singles were recently featured on Spotify's New Music Friday.
- Neriah has always wanted to use music as a tool to help others get through tough times, since that's how it's always helped her. Living in LA all her life, she's lived in the shadow of the music industry being at her fingertips, and has seen first hand how grueling the music world can be. Nonetheless, it has only motivated her to put in the work to ensure she becomes a household name. Neriah is ready for her big break and to show her family and the world that she is capable of great things – and that she is fully capable of achieving it all on her own.
