ABOUT...

- Kayley was raised in the small town of Florence, where there are two malls and two bowling alleys... and that's about it. She came from a large, tight-knit family who spent nearly every waking moment together. Her family always loved music and would blast the radio in the car whenever they got the chance – and in the car is where Kayley was introduced to some of her favorite musicians including, Martina McBride and Carrie Underwood.
- Kayley was in chorus and musical theatre as a child and realized she had a knack for singing early on. She has always had an affinity for country, and began to write music and play guitar with her dad. Together, they would craft songs, with the intention of evoking the same emotion and heart that Kayley's favorite musicians sang with. Through it all, Kayley sought out every opportunity imaginable, performing in front of anyone who would listen to her sing – all with the end goal of making it in the country music scene. She eventually moved to Nashville in 2013, and was able to work with Kid Rock fairly quickly upon her arrival. (They recorded a demo together, but it was never released).
- Kayley started posting videos on TikTok last year, and originally went viral for various outfit, hair and makeup videos. However, she quickly learned she could use that following as a platform to showcase her singing skills – and Kayley now has over 50K followers to show for it. Singing in Nashville has led to some amazing opportunities, such as being able to sing with Loretta Lynn, one of her country music heroes.
- She has been hustling in Nashville since she was 18-years-old, and is itching for her chance at country music greatness. Kayley is motivated by her love of music and a tragic loss. One of her cousins passed away at 22-years-old in an accident, and he was one of her biggest supporters in music. Every time she sings or records something, she is thinking about making him proud. Kayley wants to prove to the world and to her family that their faith in her was warranted, and that country music can produce stars "like they used to back in the day."
