ABOUT...

- Jackii, a Key Largo native, comes from a small family, which includes just her, her mom and her sister. Raised by a single mom, Jackii says she always had a strong support system. This was especially important when she came out as lesbian – something her mom supported wholeheartedly because she is also gay. Jackii's first introduction to music came at 3-years-old when her mom took her and her sister to karaoke bars. It was in these small venues that Jackii first performed on stage for a crowd of people.
- She started playing piano at 5-years-old and by the time she hit middle school, she was jamming out and writing music with her friends. When she turned 17-years-old, Jackii moved from Key Largo to Los Angeles for college, but quickly dropped out to solely focus on a music career.
- Nowadays, Jackii works in a bar at nights while pursuing music during the day. She considers herself to be a true pop singer and aims to be an inspiration for queer kids like her who didn't have singers to look up to. Jackii writes her music based on personal experiences and loves bringing those lyrics to life through her music videos. In fact, she has a condition called, synesthesia, where her brain translates words into shapes and colors.
- Jackii recently joined TikTok and has already amassed 35K followers. She post a variety of videos on her account, with live performances being some of the fan favorites. At the moment, Jackii says one of the biggest obstacles she faces is "imposter syndrome" in the industry. When it boils down to it, she ultimately wants co-signs from power players who can take her career to the next level.
