ABOUT...

- Tyler was born and raised in St. Louis, MO until she was 16-years-old, at which point she moved to Fort Lauderdale. She comes from a large family and has 11 siblings. She is the youngest of her siblings and was constantly competing for attention when she was a child. Music always made Tyler unique – whenever she sang, people listened and paid attention to her. When Tyler was 12-years-old, she was diagnosed with lupus, which made things very difficult for her. However, through all the doctors appointments and medication, Tyler says music served as her escape. She had her first opportunity to sing in front of people in church at 8-years-old and she was immediately smitten with the entertainment bug. Her church performances, coupled with at-home Hannah Montana sing-a-longs, motivated young Tyler to chase pop stardom one day.
- Nowadays, Tyler considers herself a true R&B and pop singer, but tries to distinguish herself, so as to not sound like anyone else. She writes her music from personal experiences and strives to invoke a sense of female empowerment in her songs. Tyler joined TikTok a year ago and has quickly racked up thousands of followers. She actually has two accounts – one where she posts her singing videos and one where she posts videos showing off her personality. Tyler has one song on streaming platforms called, "Problem," which she released in 2019.
- Tyler goes by "Tyler Eraee" on stage, which happens to be her niece's middle name name and the first name of her late uncle, Eric. Tyler's uncle was a major fan of her music and remains an important inspiration to this day. She can feel his presence whenever she is on stage. Tyler's dream is go on global tours and sell out stadiums across the world. At the moment, music is not her full-time job – she works as a legal associate at AllState to pay the bills and focuses on music after work and on the weekends. She says she simply doesn't have enough time to truly help herself move to the next level. Tyler would love to be able to quit her job and pursue music full-time... and when that happens, she knows she'll be well on her way to great things.
