ABOUT...

- Umar (Thutmose) was originally born in Lagos, Nigeria, but he moved to Brooklyn with his family when he was 8-years-old. He comes from a large family including an older brother, a younger brother and two older sisters. He was first introduced to music in Nigeria and immediately fell in love. He started singing in high school, and continued working on his craft in college. He attended Alfred State College, where he studied Computer Science for a year before dropping out to pursue a music career.
- He first gained notoriety for his rap skills in 2017 after released a freestyle to Kendrick Lamar's song, "Humble." After the video went viral, he continued building his success from there. He landed a coveted spot on Billie Eilish's 11-city national tour as her opening act. In 2018, his song, "Run Wild," was the trailer music for EA Sports' FIFA '18 video game. That same year, his song, "Memories," landed on the Spider-Man: Into the Spider-Verse film soundtrack, alongside artists such as Nicki Minaj, Juice Wrld, Post Malone, Swae Lee, Vinec Staples, Lil Wayne and more. Since then, Thutmose has gone on to collaborate with Scott Storch, Desiigner, Steve Aoki, Erykah Badu and more. "Run Wild" also landed on the recent soundtrack for Space Jam: A New Legacy.
- Thutmose recently joined TikTok and already has 40K followers. As an independent artist, he wants to show other aspiring rappers that they don't need a major label to make it big – you can truly make your dreams come true on your own. His biggest motivation in becoming a massive star is fulfilling the American Dream that he says he was blessed to pursue upon moving to the US with his family at a young age.
